Macdonald was born in Newcastle upon Tyne, England. He studied at the Royal College of Art in London, where he was influenced by the work of the Pre-Raphaelites and the Arts and Crafts movement. In the early 1890s, he began to develop his own distinctive style, which was characterized by its use of flat, decorative colors and fluid, sinuous lines.

Macdonald's work was first exhibited in London in 1893. He quickly gained a reputation as one of the most promising young artists of his generation. In 1896, he was elected a member of the Royal Society of British Artists. He also exhibited his work at the Paris Salon and the Venice Biennale.

In addition to his painting, Macdonald also designed furniture, textiles, and other decorative arts objects. He was a member of the Glasgow School of Art, which was one of the leading centers of Art Nouveau design in the late 19th and early 20th centuries.

Macdonald's work is represented in many public and private collections around the world. His paintings are known for their beauty, their originality, and their historical importance. He is considered to be one of the most important figures in the British Art Nouveau movement.
