The author begins his story with his childhood in a small town in the Midwest. He was raised in a religious family, and he attended church every Sunday. However, he never felt like he fit in. He didn't believe in the same things as his parents, and he didn't like the way they treated him.

When he was 18, the author left home and began traveling. He hitchhiked across the country, and he worked a variety of jobs. He met people from all walks of life, and he learned a great deal about the world.

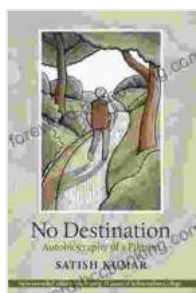

During his travels, the author came to realize that he was searching for something more than just a physical destination. He was searching for meaning and purpose in his life.

The author's search for meaning and purpose led him to a variety of different places and experiences. He studied different religions, he meditated, and he volunteered his time to help others.

Through his experiences, the author came to believe that the only true destination is the journey itself. He realized that the important thing is not to reach a specific destination, but to enjoy the journey along the way.

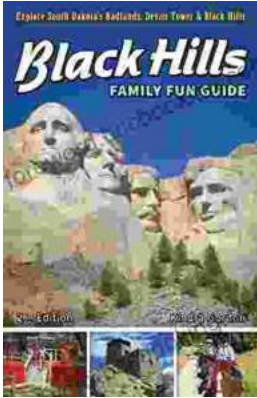

No Destination is a beautifully written and inspiring autobiography. It is a story about one man's search for meaning and purpose, and it is a reminder that the only true destination is the journey itself.
