"You must not touch the narwhal's horn," her grandmother warned. "It is sacred, and those who touch it will be punished."

Nalua, however, could not resist the temptation. She gently caressed the narwhal's horn, and instantly, the sky grew dark and a fierce storm erupted.

Nalua and her grandmother were caught in the relentless fury of the storm. The waves crashed over their kayak, and it seemed as if they would be swallowed by the unforgiving sea.
