A Prelude to Beauty and Craftsmanship

The Arts & Crafts Movement, a pivotal chapter in design history, emerged in the late 19th century as a rebellion against the soulless industrialization that plagued the era. This movement championed a return to traditional craftsmanship, natural materials, and an emphasis on beauty in everyday objects. The Art of Century Collection is a testament to the enduring legacy of this transformative movement, showcasing a captivating array of furniture, textiles, metalwork, ceramics, and more.

Pioneers of the Movement

The Arts & Crafts Movement was propelled by a visionary group of designers and craftsmen, each leaving an indelible mark on the world of design. Among them stood Gustav Stickley, whose mission-style furniture became synonymous with the movement. With its clean lines, geometric forms, and emphasis on functionality, Stickley's work epitomized the Arts & Crafts ethos.

Charles Rennie Mackintosh, another influential figure, brought a touch of Scottish flair to the movement. His iconic designs, characterized by their linear elegance and restrained ornamentation, continue to captivate design enthusiasts worldwide.

William Morris, a polymath of his time, not only designed textiles and wallpapers but also wrote, painted, and established the Kelmscott Press. His intricate patterns and vibrant colors infused the Arts & Crafts Movement with a touch of romanticism and whimsy.
