In the year 1620, as religious persecution cast a dark shadow over Europe, a group of devout English Puritans resolved to embark on a perilous journey across the treacherous Atlantic Ocean. Driven by their unwavering faith and a yearning for religious freedom, they set their sights upon the shores of the New World.

Carefully selecting the sturdy Mayflower, these courageous souls bid farewell to their homeland and set sail from Plymouth, England, on September 6th, 1620. Aboard the ship were 102 passengers and a crew of 30, their hearts filled with both trepidation and an unyielding determination.

Enduring the Perils of the Atlantic Crossing

The Atlantic crossing proved to be a formidable challenge for the Mayflower's passengers and crew. For two long and tempestuous months, they braved howling winds, towering waves, and the constant threat of shipwreck.
