The Lost Lives

The four Grand Duchesses lived an idyllic childhood, surrounded by governesses, tutors, and the love of their parents. They were educated in the arts, music, and literature, and they were known for their intelligence, beauty, and gentle spirits. However, the outbreak of the First World War in 1914 cast a dark shadow over their lives. The Tsar and Tsarina became increasingly isolated from their people, and their daughters were forced to witness the horrors of war firsthand.

In 1917, the Bolshevik Revolution swept across Russia, and the Imperial family was overthrown. The Tsar and Tsarina were imprisoned, and their daughters were taken into custody. The Grand Duchesses were subjected to months of interrogation and confinement, during which they faced constant threats and humiliation.

Finally, on the night of July 16/17, 1918, the Bolsheviks executed the entire Imperial family, including the Grand Duchesses, in the basement of the Ipatiev House in Ekaterinburg. Their bodies were buried in a mass grave, where they remained undiscovered for decades.
